Preface

THE GWYSANEY MANUSCRIPT of the Liber Landavensis, which is now for the first time reproduced diplomatically, was not consulted by the Welsh MSS. Society in the preparation of the edition of 1840. Of the value of that edition,[1] which was based entirely on later transcripts, it is not necessary here to speak further than to point out that its readings differ considerably, in many places, from those of the twelfth-century MS., now at Gwysaney. This is the case especially with proper names and with those portions of the text which are in Welsh. Why the Rev. W. J. Rees did not base his text on the twelfth-century MS. is not clear, for "he actually mentions the then and present owner of it by name in order to say that he did not possess it. Mr. Rees could hardly have applied to him for information on the subject[2]."

[1] "Unfortunately, there are considerable discrepancies of text between Mr. Rees's printed edition and [his] original; which, however, as I am informed, are due to Mr. Rees or his copyist, and not to the Hengwrt copy. Mr. Rees has obviously added to the number out of his own ingenuity," &c. ARTHUR W. HADDAN on the Original MS. of the Liber Landavensis in the Archæologia Cambrensis, 1868, Third Series, Vol. XIV, pp. 311–328.

[2] After giving quotations to show that the twelfth-century MS. was at Owston, Doncaster, Mr. REES adds: "Further enquiries have been made respecting the MS. but no information could be obtained, so that its existence, and the place where it is deposited, as well as of the Selden MS. and the Llandaff Transcript[5], are at present unknown." PREFACE to the 1840 edition, p. xxxiii. Let it be understood, once for all, that the Llandaff—Selden—Trawscod—Llannerch—Owston—Gwysaney MS. is one and the same MS.

The story of the wanderings of the Gwysaney MS. had perhaps better be told at once, so as to remove all seeming mystery connected with it. As

[3] Cotton MS. Vitellius C. 10. This is probably the MS. described as Inter libros Joannis Pontefii Ex Codice Landauenfis Ecclesie, fed recenter fcripto. See the first part, which is not paged, of Sir Matt. Hale's MS. 34, in Lincoln's Inn Library. See Notes 17 and 56. Just as this note is passing through the press I have seen a copy of Cartæ et Alia Munimenta de Glamorgan, Vol. III, in which the Grants to Ll. Dâv are printed from Vit. C. 10,—a very respectable transcript. Mr. Clark, the editor, "thought well to prefix to his volume a selection of [Landaff] Charters ..... These accordingly have been transcribed from the copies in the British Museum by the care of his friend, Mr. W. de Gray Birch." Mr. Clark admits that these selections "add inconveniently to the bulk" of his book; it cannot be said that they "add materially to its value," for the care spoken of is not synonymous with anything approaching accuracy of transcription in the case of proper names.

[4] In A Catalogue of curious and valuable MSS. in Hengwrt Library, A.D. 1658, under No. 162, we find the following entry: "Liber Landavensis from Mr. Selden's library, folio, in parchment three inches thick, having Teilio's picture in brass on the lid thereof, formerly overlaid with gold and silver, but now almost worn out by age. This venerable monument of time and antiquity, Mr. Robert Vaughan, of Hengwrt, copied out verbatim in the very same character with the prototype, and that on vellum parchment, A.D. 1660." Cambrian Register, 1818, Vol. III., pp. 278—313. It would be more accurate to say that the Catalogue was begun in 1658, for it is certain that entry "162" could not have been made before September, 1659. See pages xiv–xv.

[5] Liber Landavensis .... Exemplar nitidiffimum, membranâ, fed nuperis annis eleganter (fervatur enim Antiqui Codicis Chirographum) magis quam accurate exfcriptum, oftendunt Archivæ Landavenfes, &c aliud[8] Bibl. Coll. Jef. Oxon." Edw: Lhuyd in Archæologia Britannica, 1707, p. 259, col. 1. It is morally certain that this Exemplar is the MS. referred to in the Cathedral Act books. "In 1693 'the Bishop, Archdeacon, and Chapter, upon the motion of Dr. Edwards, the Treasurer, ordered that Tylo's Book ... should be delivered to him upon his giving a caution of 20*l.*, and for the re-delivery thereof to this Chapter at next Petertide.' And in 1697, June 30, 'at which time Mr. Griffith Thomas brought in Tylo's Book .... and left it in the Registry, whereupon the said Chapter discharged Dr. Edwards[8] of the obligation he entered into for the return thereof'." Bp. Ollivant's Llandaff Cathedral, 1860, p. 8.

[6] William Lloyd was elected Bishop of Ll. Dâv in April 1675, translated to Peterborough in 1679, thence to the see of Norwich, June 1685, and ejected therefrom for refusing to take the oath of fealty to William III. He died at Hammersmith 1st Jany. 1709–10. Bp. Ollivant failed to trace Bishop Lloyd's MS., which (presumably a transcript of the Exemplar[5]) was probably copied between 1675 and 1679. That there was such a MS. is proved by note 7, and by the words "Legis ordinatione in Apogr. lib. Landavens. penes Epifc. Norvicens." in Collier's Ecclesiastical History, 1708, Vol. I, p. 715.

[8] MS. CXII, folio, pp. 1–329, was given to Jesus College, Oxford, by Dr. Jonathan Edwards, (Principal 1686–1712), who is the Dr. Edwards of Note 5; the MS. therefore must have been written between 1693 and 1697.

[9] Cotton MS. Vesp. A. 14, in the British Museum. See Variant Readings, pp. 358–362. The parts of the MS. which concern us belong to the end of the 12th and the beginning of the 13th centuries.

will be seen from the accompanying Table, which does not aim at being exhaustive,[14] several copies have been taken from time to time. But previous to the year 1619, as the entries (on pages 303-5) of the successive bishops prove, the MS. could never have been long absent from its Cathedral home.

7 Lambeth MS. 582, p. 85. "Antiquum Ecclesie Landavensis Registrum Apographum eius extat penes R. P. Willelmum Lloyd Ep'um Norwicensem, olim Landavensem, ex alio eiusdem Registri apographo descriptum, Ipsum enim autographum interiit*." Then at the right hand corner of the same page there is this additional entry, "*Sic mihi retulit d'cus Ep'us. Contra autem Humfridus Ep'us Bangor. autographum adhuc extare mihi nuper afferuit." The extracts begin "Initium facit Historiola de primo statu Land. Eccl'æ; qua habetur in Monastico vol. 3, p. 188. et in Anglia Sacra vol. 2. p. 667. Sequuntur omnia quæ Monasticon habet usq*ue* ad finem paginæ 188. sine ullis additionibus." Then follow various extracts, consisting of Bulls, Teilo's Privilegium, donations, Fuit vir Budic, &c., and on p. 89 we find "Post narratam supra Urbani consecrationem sequitur Vita S. Elgari Eremitæ.....Sequitur vita S. Samsonis"; which show that Bp. Lloyd's copy was probably complete, though differently arranged. Lambeth MS. 582 has an entry for the year 1688, so that it must be later than that year, but not much later. Lambeth MS. 589, pp. 131–6, contains a list of the Bishops of Ll. Dâv, ending with Robert Holgate.

[10] Corpus Christi College (Cantab.) MS. CI, contains 3 extracts (A, B, & C,) from the life of Dubricius, and the words "XVIII Decembris" at the beginning of extract A points to Vesp. A. 14, as the original. Cp. Variant Reading to page 68, l. 4, on p. 358. At the end of extract C these words occur: "Ex antiquissimo quodam libro scripto D. Henrici Sidnei in quo tractantur vite quorundam divorum Britannicorum in vita Dubritii, cuius vitam scripsit etiam Benedictus cenobii S'ci Petri ap'li Claudiocestrie monachus." The Life of Dubricius by Benedict is printed in the Anglia Sacra, Vol. II, pp. 654-661.

[11] Wharton's Anglia Sacra, 1691, Vol. II, pp. 662–674, contains the lives of Dubritius and Teilo from Vesp. A. 14. The sources of this and other extracts are indicated in his Preface, Vol. II, pp. xxvi-xxvii.

[12] Corpus Christi College (Cantab.) MS. CX., pp. 435–448, contains "(1) Anno ab incarnatione d'ni 156 Lucius rex Britannorum, &c.; (2) Privilegium Sancti Oudocei; (3) Privilegium Josephi Episcopi; (4) Privilegium Berthgvini; (5) Privilegium concessum Herewaldo and so on, finally concluding ... tempore regis et comitis Willelmi et Walteri de Laci." I am indebted to the kindness of the Rev. J. R. Harmer, (Librarian of C. C. C. Cantab.) for the above items, and also for extracts from Archbishop Parker's MSS. CI. See notes 10 and 13.

[13] Lambeth MS. 585, pp. 339–349, is a 17th Century transcript of Archbishop Parker's MS. CX; see note 12. There is also, on page 197, the date of the death of Cheveilliauc, Libiau and Gucaun as given in this work, except that the latter date is given as DCCCCXXXII, if I copied it correctly. The heading is, "In tergo Rotuli 1." This MS. belonged to Wharton.

[14] (a) For instance, John of Tinmouth (Cotton MS. Tiberius E.I., Brit. Museum) got his Life of Oudoceus and some others, in all probability, from the Liber Landavensis. (b) Capgrave, in his Nova Legenda Anglie, 1516, merely copied John of Tinmouth verbatim, with few exceptions. See Tanner's Bibliotheca, 1748, p. 440. (c) Tanner MS. 15, in the Bodleian Library, seems to be an exact copy of John of Tinmouth done in 1499. At the end of Tanner MS. 15, there is (in a sixteenth century hand) a transcript of the life of Dubricius from Vesp. A. 14. (d) Cotton MS. Titus D. 22, (folios 24–28b.) has the high sounding title "Chronicon Ecclesie Landavensis a Bruto ad A.C. 1370," but it has no value. The reference to Germanus and Lupus coming to Britain, to Dubricius retiring to Bardsey when an old man, and to his body being removed to Ll. Dâv in 1120, is no evidence that the compiler had seen the Gwysaney MS. See Edition 1840, pp. 277–8. (e) Hengwrt MS. 158 contains the Lives of Elgar and Sampson; (f) Hengwrt MS. 275 has "Vita Elgari; Donatio Llangors ex Lib. Land."; (g) Hengwrt MS. 350 "contains a summary of the Liber Landavensis"; and (h) Jeuan Brydyd Hir's extracts.

We may assume it to have been at Llan Dâv in the time of Davyd Benwyn[15] (1550-1600); and Bishop Godwin,[16] we know, found and left it there. Soon after, Theophilus Field, some time between his consecration at Llan Dâv in 1619 and his translation to the see of St. David's in 1627, lent the MS. to John Selden,[17] the antiquary. While in Selden's keeping the MS. was seen by Sir Henry Spelman[18] and Sir William Dugdale,[19] who quote from it extensively:

[16] Before his appointment as bishop, (Nov. 22, 1601,) Francis Godwin had evidently never seen the Liber Landavensis, for in his first edition (1601) of A Catalogue of the Bishops of England he says simply 'I find deliuered' ... (p. 423.) In his second edition (1615) he amplifies the same passage as follows: 'There is a very ancient booke belonging to the church of Landaffe, commonly called Saint Teilans booke, reporting the greatest part of that which I deliuer concerning this See. In it I finde..... In all our Records he [Teilo] is called Archbishop of Landaff' (p. 516). This passage runs as follows in the third edition (entitled De Præsulibus Anglie Commentarius, 1616): "Librum habet ecclesia nostra Landauensis, antiquitatis venerandæ, ante annos quinge*n*tos conscriptus, vnde maxima*m* parte*m* mutuati sumus eoru*m*, quæ de Episcopis eiusdem dicenda sunt, anno Christi 1110. non recentioribus" (p. 618). Of the three editions he says: 'Episcoporum Anglicorum Catalogum contexui anno 1601. qui non parùm auctus & locupletatus, iterum (sed mendosissimè) anno 1614. editus, nunc demum anno 1616. in Latinum sermonem, multis id flagitantibus, à me conuersus est' (p. 642).

[17] Selden has left the following entry in his own writing: *Tilo liber Landauensis vet. MS. cuius usu*m mihi communicauit V. Reu'dis. Theophilus Ep'us Landauensis. Sir Matthew Hale's MS. 84, fol. 63, Lincoln's Inn Library. Three lines from the bottom of the same folio, extracts from another MS. begin opposite the marginal note: *This in alt*er *lib*er, fol. 16. These extracts have been copied into Sir Matt. Hale's MS. 34, second part, pp. 78-80. To Mr. Lleuver Thomas, Barrister-at-Law, of Lincoln's Inn, belongs the credit of pointing out the entry in MS. 84.

[18] That Spelman saw the MS. his words leave no room to doubt: Omnes has Landavenses Synodos ..... in splendidum concinnavit manuscriptum codicem Author quidam vetustus, sed qui post Herewaldi obitum [1103] .... floruit ..... Habetur autem codex ipse Ms. in archivis Landavensis Episcopatus: & nos inde hæc totaliter exaravimus, quæ Godwinus Præsul in Commentario de Præsulibus Angliæ perfunctorie trajicit.' Concilia, 1639, p. 386. The second part simply means that the MS. belonged to Ll. Dâv, not necessarily that it was in the Cathedral archives at the time (1639), just as the MS. is here described as at Gwysaney, though as a matter of fact it is being sized and bound afresh in the old oak boards, at the British Museum. But I assume, as Spelman had a right to assume, that in due time the MS. will be returned to its proper home. [The foregoing note was written in March, 1892. The MS. is now, January 1893, at Gwysaney].

[19] "Ex pervetusto codice MS. ad episc. Landa*v*ensem olim spectante, nunc vero penes virum cl*arum* Joh. Seldenum fol. 74." Monasticon Angli-

it was examined also by Archbishop Ussher,[20] but not necessarily by Bryan Twyne[21]. During this period, too, Richard James[22] saw the Gwysaney MS. itself, or the Cottonian copy[3] of it. The words of Spelman[18] do not prove that the MS. was ever returned by Selden, in whose library it was found at his death in 1654. Mr. Haddan[1] urges on behalf of Selden that "its proper owners, the Bishop and Chapter of Landaff, were abolished—so far as the law of the canum, the original edition of 1655, Vol. I, p. 546. And on p. 188 of Vol. III, 1673, we find "Ex Cod. MS. Eccl. Cath. Landavenſis in bibl. Seldenianâ." From this it is clear that the copies of the Grants had been made before 1655.

[20] "Trinity College Library, Dublin, 1/4/92. The heading in Ussher's MS. is 'Ex Registro Landavensis: Vita Elgari Eremitae.' At the end of this is, 'These deeds are to be transcribed a fol. 65 Col. 1, ad 67 col. 3, where beginneth ye life S. Oudocei.' Then follows 'Ex vita Oudocei.' This ends 'aut exilii civi classe longius deportata etc.' Fin. Our press mark is D. 3. 16. The folios are not numbered." I have to thank the Rev. T. K. Abbot, B.D. for the above particulars. The reference to "fol. 67, col. 3, where beginneth ye life of S. Oudocei" proves that the Gwysaney MS. is the one referred to.

[21] "Ex libro Landaff vetuſtiſsimo in tegumento siniſtrali Jmago S. ~~Tylenis~~ Teyliaui patroni loci. aut ære aut cupro tenentis libru*m*." Corpus Christi College, Oxon., MS. 255, fol. 51^a. The extracts, which cover nearly two pages, are not in the handwriting of Bryan Twyne, to whom the MS. once belonged.

[22] "Excerpta Libri Landavensis qui dicitur Tilo." Bodley MS. James 24, pp. 117–130. Then follows "Ex codice Landavensis qui vocatur Textus ec*cles*ia*e*." pp. 130–135. Both Mr. Rees (Preface p. xxxv), and Mr Haddan, (Arch. Camb. p. 312) attribute this MS. to Dr. [Thomas] James, the first Bodley Librarian, whereas it was written by Richard James, B.D., (C.C.C., Oxon.) "a severe Calvinist, if not worse . . . . . This person, tho' humorous, was of a far better judgment than his uncle [Dr.] Thom. James . . . . . and had he lived to his age, would have surpassed him in published books. He was a traveller also, was in Russia in 1619, and esteemed to be a person well vers'd in most parts of learning . . . . . The famous Selden was much beholden to him for the drudgery he did for him, when he composed his Marmora Arundeliana, acknowledging him in his preface to that book, to be 'multiiugæ doctrinæ studijque indefatigabilis vir.' Sir Rob. Cotton also his great patron, and his son sir Thomas, could not but acknowledge his like drudgery in the ordering, disposing, and settling their incomparable library . . . . . Nothing was wanting to our author, and his studies, but a sinecure or a prebendship; either of which, if conferr'd upon him, Hercules his labours would have seem'd a trifle." Anthony A. Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses, Vol. II, p. 629. The Marmora Arvndelliana was published in 1628, and it is therefore probable that R. James made his extracts direct from the Gwysaney MS. then in Selden's Library. And possibly the Textus ecclesiae[23] of extracts II. may be the same as the Alter liber of Selden's extracts (see Note 17), and one of the MSS. included in Godwin's reference[16] to 'all our records.'

land could abolish them—and that they continued so" in September 1659, when the second[23] portion of Selden's books was transferred to the Bodleian Library. But it must be admitted that Selden had had ample time in which to return the MS. before March 1644-5, when, on the death of Bishop Morgan Owen, the see was left void. The fact of the see continuing void till 1660 may account for [21]Dugdale speaking of the MS., in 1655, as 'formerly' belonging to Llan Dâv. On this theory Selden is guilty of nothing worse than procrastination, a common failing with the borrower of books. Or it may be that Selden had the MS. copied, and that such copy was accepted in the place of the original. Certain it is that Edward Lhuyd found in the archives of Llan Dâv "a very beautiful exemplar on parchment lately copied, but more elegantly than accurately written, the handwriting of the ancient codex being preserved[5]." When we bear in mind that Lhuyd was familiar with ancient MSS. and had seen the Gwysaney copy at Llanerch, it is suspicious to read of the handwriting of the original being preserved, especially if we reflect that Bishop Field's successors had in all probability never seen it. But let us fix this firmly in our minds: there is not a scrap of [24]evidence [23] Selden bequeathed his Oriental books and MSS. to the Bodleian Library—at all events these were sent soon after his death; the second portion, after being offered to and refused by the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, was sent to Oxford in 1659. There was still a third portion, which perished utterly. According to Ayliffe "the fire in the temple destroyed in one of their Chambers eight chests full of the registers of abbeys and other manuscripts relating to the history of England." Can it be that this fire destroyed the Textus Ecclesiæ[22], or does any one know where it is kept? See the Rev. W. D. Macray's Annals of the Bodleian Library, 1890, pp. 111–121.

that Selden ever sent this Exemplar[25] to Llan Dâv; while the fact that Bishop Field's signature is the last to appear in the original MS. (p. 305) is presumptive evidence that it never was returned.

Shortly after the death of Selden, Robert Vaughan of Hengwrt, Merionethshire, applied to one of the executors[26] Mr. John Vaughan, of Trawscod, for a loan of the twelfth-century MS., and we cannot do better than give here a part of that correspondence[27] :—

To Mr. Vaughan of Trowscoed, Feb. 5, 1654.

. . . . . Pardon me, I pray you, in that I have presumed (without any relation or acquaintance) to write unto you, and to crave your favour and furtherance to procure the loane of a booke, which (as I have been lately informed) was in the possession of your friend, the great antiquary, Mr. Selden; I meane the booke of Landaffe, or Llyfr Teiliaw. I desire it for noe longer a tyme than I may conveniently write it out; and for the safe keeping and returning of it at the tyme and place you shall appointe, I myselfe [with three others]. . . will enter into a bond of what penalties you please; and if it may not be had that way, I humbly desire that you will take some order, whereby a friend of myne may have accesse to it to write it out, though that way will not give me such content as if I myselfe had the perusing and [24] What evidence there is proves just the contrary. Robert Vaughan writes Feby. 5, 1654 "the Booke of Landaffe, being long since conveyed to England, there is not a copy of it in any parte of Wales that I do know." Cambrian Register, 1818, Vol. iii, p. 301.

[25] This exemplar seems to have disappeared in the time of Bishop Watson. See Preface to edition of 1840, pp. xxx-xxxi.

[26] Selden bequeathed all his property subject to certain small legacies to his "beloved friends Edward Heyward of Reyfsham in the county of Norfolk, and of the Inner-Temple, Esq; John Vaughan of Troescoed in the county of Cardigan, and of the Inner-Temple, Esq; Matthew Hale of Lincolns-Inn, Esq; and Rowland Jewks the elder, of the Inner-Temple, Esq. . . . . my books, parchments and papers whatsoever, which I shall not otherwise dispose of . . . I give and bequeath to my executors. . . . . to their own use and behoof: But desiring them rather to part them among themselves, or otherwise dispose of them, or the choicest of them, for some publick use, than put them to any common sale": Selden's Will prefixed to his Opera Omnia edited by D. Wilkins, 1726, pp. liii—lv.

writing of it; for (besides that it is an ancient MSS. that may require some skill in the reading of it) it contayneth many ancient charters and donations of lands bestowed upon the see and the bishops thereof, whose meares and bounds are therein written in the ancient British tongue, which now few can understand and truly write out. . . . . ROBERT VAUGHAN

To Mr. Vaughan of Trowscoed, March 25, 1656.

. . . . . The cold of winter being now past, I finde myself in a good disposition to falle upon the writing of the booke of Landaffe, which you promised to lend me. . . . . be pleased. . . . to intrust somebody or other within the county of Merioneth to see me and my sureties seale and deliver a bond to your uses, of what penaltie you shall think fitt, for the restoring of it againe; thereby to save me (being an old man) a journey, and much trouble to my friends, which otherwise we must undergoe, if we be driven to come to Trowscoed. . . . . And as for the tyme of the restitution of it, I likewise humbly crave it may be as much prolonged as with convenience you cann, in regarde I must, according to my promise, ... write a copy for you, and another for myselfe . . . . . I have not such a command of my hand as young and nimble clerkes have, for I write very slowe, and therefore cannot performe in a moneth what they cann in a weeke; but I am sure I shall thinke every weeke a moneth untill I have done.

Robert Vaughan writes again on the 20th May, 1658, and after the lapse of sixteen months receives at last the following letter:

. . . . . I have, according to my undertaking, at my last being in London, procured that manuscript which you desired to transcribe, and have it with me for your use; it now belongs to the publique library at Oxford, where Mr Selden's whole library is disposed. If you desire to make use of it at your owne home, for your better conveniency, I am required to take caution for the restitution by bond, to prevent accidents that may happen upon death or otherwise, which I suppose you will not scruple at, the property belonging to such a corporation as the University. . . .

Trowscoed, Sept. 24th, 1659. JO. VAUGHAN.

The MS. was accordingly lent to Robert Vaughan, and his transcript[4] is now in the Hengwrt collection at Penjarth. Before it could be returned to Trawscod Charles II. was on the throne, and bishoprics left vacant by Cromwell were filled. This fact probably explains why the MS. was not, on its return, sent on to the "publique library at Oxford"; for it was once more the rightful property of the Bishop and Chapter of Llan Dâv. If Robert Vaughan made his promised second copy and sent it, along with the original, to Sir John Vaughan, this might be the Exemplar nitidissimum of Lhuyd.[5] Prima facie this theory derives support[28] from the antique style of the writing of R. Vaughan's copy at Penjarth. But even supposing this view to be correct, fresh difficulties arise. Why did Sir[29] John Vaughan send the copy to Llan Dâv and retain the original at Trawscod? Did he consider the times too unsettled to restore the original to the archives of the Cathedral, or did he keep it back because he intended it for the Bodleian Library, but owing to the pressure of official duties[29] forgot or neglected to deposit it there, till death once more changed the home of the manuscript.

[28] The chief difficulties in accepting this theory are: (1) The difficulty Robert Vaughan experienced in writing, and the time it would take to make two copies in the old characters; (2) the reported inaccuracies of the Exemplar as well as of the copy of the Exemplar in Jesus College; (3) the fact that the Exemplar was evidently correct in some instances where the Hengwrt MS. is certainly wrong. Still, Robert Vaughan's failing powers might account for a second copy being less accurate than the first, though the additional practice thus gained might improve the characters. And if both copies were made direct from the original there would inevitably be slight variations. Lhuyd unfortunately never saw the Hengwrt copy, and the question can scarcely be settled definitely unless we recover the missing Exemplar, or discover a direct account of its origin. The probability is that Robert Vaughan wrote a second copy in fulfilment of his promise to Sir John Vaughan.

The next link in the chain of evidence is the inscription in small brass nails on the front cover of the MS.—Librum hunc temporis injurias passum novantiquo tegmine munire curavit R.D. 1696. This Robert Davies of Llanerch (1658-1710) was a keen antiquarian, and had presumably become possessed of the MS. through his marriage.[30]

"From Mr. Robert Davies the MS. descended to the successive owners of his estates, and finally to Mr. John Davies, his great-grandson, who died without issue in 1785. . . . . In 1792 the Welsh estates of the Davies family were divided by act of Parliament between the two sisters of Mr. John Davies, and the MSS. were divided at the same time.[31] The Liber Landavensis, among others, went (with Gwysaney) to Mary, who married Philip Puleston of Havod y Wern, co. Denbigh, Esq.; of which marriage the sole issue was a daughter, Frances, who married Bryan Cooke, Esq., of Owston, co. York, M.P. for Malton; whose grandson and heir, Philip Bryan Davies-Cooke, Esq., of Gwysaney and Owston, is accordingly the present most careful and courteous owner of the never really missing MS."[1]

The MS. itself is strongly bound in oak boards,

[29] Mr. (afterwards Sir) John Vaughan, who became Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1668, had a perfect right to retain the MS. under the terms of Selden's Will (see note 26); and the gift of the MS. to Oxford was perhaps never anything more than a pious intention, for neither Sir Thomas Bodley's Librarian, nor the Keeper of the University Archives can find any reference whatsoever to the MS., or to the bond of Robert Vaughan. Still this proves nothing, because whenever I have tried to trace how certain Welsh MSS. have come into the Bodleian I have never been able to discover a proper entry in the Records of the Library before the year 1882. Sir Matthew Hale also died possessed of some of Selden's MSS. The executors, being desired to part some of the books and MSS. among themselves, did so. Their case then is not one of other days, other ways.

[30] Robert Davies owned the adjoining estates of Llannerch in Denbighshire, and of Gwysaney in Flintshire. He married Letitia, the grand-daughter of Sir John Vaughan, and the sister of John Vaughan, (1st Viscount Lisburne) of Trawscod or Crosswood, near Aberystwyth. Mr. Haddan[1] thinks the MS. passed to R. Davies "either by gift of Sir John, or upon his death in 1674", i.e. when R. Davies was 16 years of age! The brass-sprigs inscription on the cover, as well as the book-mark inside it, makes it likely that the MS. was a gift to R. Davies, but from his wife's brother rather than from her grand-father. R. Davies "died on the 8th and was buried on the 11th July, 1710, at Mold, aged 52."

and has on its end cover a bronze figure[32] in high relief as represented in our frontispiece. To protect this figure from accidents a padded 'casing' has been made to fit the covers, which bind together (1) a philosophical[33] treatise, (2) a Latin version of the first Gospel[34], and (3) the textual matter of this work.

In the Book of Llan Dâv proper, which contains 84 leaves of vellum in good preservation, the writing is not all the same, nor does it belong to the same time. The part-author, part-compiler began on column 77 (=p. 68) with the words De primo statu Landavensis Ecclesie; and the writing of the principal hand (A) is so characteristic that he would be ill-advised who would venture to assume that it is the work of more than one scribe. The text also bears throughout the impress of so marked an individuality that I am convinced that it is the work of one man, whom I suspect to be no other than Geoffrey of Monmouth. Such a suspicion is a little startling

[31] The method of dividing the Library was so original that it deserves to be commemorated. When a work was in two volumes one heiress took Vol. I, and the other Vol. II. But apparently in the case of single volumes and of the MSS. (including the Liber Landavensis) they were placed in a scale—some in one end, and some in the other! Such is the family tradition as I understand it.

[32] This figure according to Mr. Haddan[1] represents "our Lord standing on a crescent and uplifting His hand in the act of blessing." Others have thought it intended for St. Teilo, which seems far more probable. There is no nimbus, and there is a book which may typify St. Teilo's Book, the old name of the Gwysaney MS. At all events it is certain that the figure is not "standing on a crescent," but sitting on some architectural device.

[33] The subject as far as it could be made out seems to be philosophical: the writing is simply "horrible", and belongs to the (?) 14th century.

[34] This copy of the Gospel was written earlier than any part of the Book of Llan Dâv, but the earlier chapters, being either lost or injured, have been replaced in a hand of about 1400. Mr. Haddan[2] says that it is the "Vulgate text, but with a trace here and there that the transcriber was familiar with the old Latin (e.g., the words ventura and omnes are interlined respectively at c. iii, v. 7, and c. vii, v. 23)."

at first, but on examining the probabilities it becomes less and less so. Mr. Haddan[1] and others have assumed that this fine example of calligraphy was penned 'during the episcopate of Urban,' and possibly under his guidance. But what is the proof of this? The MS. itself does not support such an assumption, for, at the very beginning of it, Urban is spoken of as the 'aforesaid bishop, a man of blessed memory' (p. 85), a statement in itself sufficient to preclude the possibility of its being written during Urban's life. The exquisite style of the writing also points to a later time. At first sight one is apt to assign the MS. to the third quarter of the twelfth century. When, however, I came to transcribe it and to read it over carefully a second, third, fourth, and fifth time, the conclusion was forced upon me that hand A must have been written about 1150. Other considerations support this conclusion. The large bold hand at the beginning of the Black Book of Carmarthen belongs, at the latest, to the first part of Henry II.'s reign. In the Black Book the common plural termination is -eu; the older form -ou never once occurs. In our text on the contrary the -ou as a plural termination is constant[35]. Thus we find the time of composition limited on the one side by the death of Urban, and on the other by the closing years of Stephen's reign.

[35] The exception to the uniform use of -ou is furnished only by proper names such as Guor*eu*, Loud*eu*, Gurcen*eu*, Oufr*eu*, L. Loud*eu* & L*eu*brit. These instances, though they do not affect the plural -ou termination, are just enough to indicate the beginning of the transition period.

[36] Ward's Catalogue of Romances in the British Museum, 1883, pp. 203-222.

That such a man as Urban, who spent his episcopal days in contending with his brother bishops of Hereford and St. David's, and in travelling repeatedly to Rome to appeal to the arbitrament of the Holy Father, should hunt up and collect old charters on which to rest his case is precisely what we should expect. But that lives of Saints should be written in the midst of such unseemly strife is less probable; and in 1133 Urban, in itinere Romano, died fighting to the last. The see was left vacant till 1140 when Uchtryd, the archdeacon, was consecrated bishop; and then or soon after his more celebrated nephew succeeded to the archidiaconate.[36] The Prophecies of Merlin and the Historia Regum Britanniæ were already [36]finished. What could be more natural than that Geoffrey, finding a large accumulation of documents in the archives of the Cathedral, and being now officially connected with the edifice, should conceive the idea of weaving them into a connected history? It is difficult to imagine that the author of so successful a work as the Historia Regum Britanniæ should rest content for the remainder of his days with merely revising that work, and with the metrical recreations of the Vita Merlini. Besides, the writing itself has all the appearance of being spread over some years, and in the case of the grants the influence of a more archaic style is traceable in the formation of the characters.

All this we might expect in an original MS., but scarcely in the case of a transcript. Again, in the rubric to the late twelfth-century copy of the life of Teilo in Vesp. A. 14, the author's name appears as 'Galfrid, the brother of Urban bishop of Llan Dâv.' It would be a strange coincidence indeed to find two Galfrids at Llan Dâv at the same time who were both possessed of marked literary ability. Urban had a brother named Esni, but of Galfrid there is, to my knowledge, no mention except in this rubric. The confusion might arise from the likelihood of the Vespasian copyist hearing that Geoffrey was a near relative of the bishop of Llan Dâv, and, without staying to inquire to what bishop or in what degree he was related, 'put him down' as brother of Urban. To attribute the authorship to a 'brother' of Bishop Urban might also be to add to its authority, especially in the 'spiteful days'[36] of William of Newburgh, and immediately after.

One more point must be mentioned. Whoever the author of the work may be, that he did not live to finish his task is very evident. The compilation is interrupted during the episcopate of Herewald, and nothing short of death would be likely to prevent the writer bringing his account down to the demise of Urban, who had done so much to revive, maintain, or extend the claims of his diocese. And not only is the story interrupted, but blanks[37] are left here and there showing that the author considered there were more materials for his purpose, or that further investigation was necessary. Had he been merely drawing on his imagination we should have no breaks in the narrative, no gaps left to be filled in later. In certain portions of the lives of Dubricius, Teilo, and Oudoceus we have a pen emancipated more or less from historical facts, and revelling in traditions as generally is the case with the lives of saints. How different are the prosaic parts which deal with the grants[45]! No one who has any knowledge of Old Welsh will for a moment believe that Geoffrey or any of his contemporaries could have written the Welsh of Teilo's Privilegium, or of the boundaries. The forms of the proper names also bear their witness; and the names themselves will furnish the ethnologist with many a lost link in the story of the past.

It is when we come to deal with the [40]chronology that real difficulties arise. There were probably no materials besides the grants to guide the compiler, and many grants must have perished, while those which remain are often difficult to date. Evidently no complete list of the bishops had been kept, and the very names of some of them may have been [38]lost. Let a modern historian attack the subject and, by way of a beginning, tell us when Dubricius lived and died[39]. We have probably most of the materials which the compiler had, and it behoves us to make a more scientific use of them. On page 71 we are told that Dubricius divided the charge committed to [38] For instance Bp. Cyvelach, killed in 756, is not mentioned. Councils, p. 147.

[39] Dubricius was a contemporary of Samson, bishop of Dol, who attended the Council of Paris in A.D. 557, and signed his name 'Samson Episcopus.' See Councils, p. 149; and Vita S. Samsonis in Mabillon's Acta Sanctorum.

his care by sending a certain number of his disciples among those churches which had been given to himself (in his native district of Erging). We find the names of these disciples on page 80, and they appear as suffragan bishops on pages 160-167. Godwin and others failed to grasp this fact, and in consequence the suffragan bishops appear as Bishops of Llan Dâv. Hence the unreasonableness of much of the old criticisms by which the trustworthiness of the Liber Landavensis was impugned. The inversion of the order of the documents does not invalidate their testimony, but rather enhances it, for it tends to remove the suspicion of artifice and forgery. The misplacement of Bishop Grecielis, was discovered by the compiler, for he states on page 181 that Berthguin succeeded Oudoceus, and adds on page 184 that Grecielis followed 'a long time after,' and then 'after an interval' came Cerenhir. A critical examination of the lists of witnesses fully bears out this statement.[40] The names of clerics who become abbots or bishops, and especially the names of kings are helpful in matters of chronology. If a witness appears in one place as filius regis, in another as rex, and in a third place as pater regis, we feel sure of the order in which the grants should be arranged.

However these questions of chronology and history would require a volume to discuss them; and as the [40] The order of the succession of the Bishops seems to have been as follows:—Dubricius[45], Teliau, Oudoceus, Berthguinus, Trichan, Elvogus, Catguaret, ? Grecielis, Cerenhir, Nobis, Nud, Cimelliauc, Libiau, ? Gulfrit, Pater, Gucaun, Bledri, etc. The disciples of Dubricius appear as bishops on pp. 160-8; Guodloiu and Edilbiu I cannot place. The above order is merely a tentative suggestion.

Series to which this work belongs aims simply at providing reliable texts with adequate indices, we must revert to the question of authorship. The charters pure and simple are, on the face of them, genuine[45]; while the Synodical accounts, though based on facts, are clothed in the words of the compiler, and decorated by certain touches calculated to impress rebellious subjects with a salutary fear of church discipline. Hence the interpolated passages about bells being inverted, about relics and crosses being removed from the altar and placed on the ground, at a time earlier by several centuries, than the commencement of such methods for enforcing obedience to the ecclesiastical power[41]. Such words as 'Post hec' 'Post longum tempus,' 'Factâ.....' 'iterum,' serve generally to warn the reader of the amplifications or additions of the compiler. Then the lectiones in the lives of the saints were written 'for example of life and instruction of manners,' and can never have been intended to be accepted seriously as history, though even here certain incidents may be coloured rather than invented.

We must remember that the writer was a divine

[41] For instance in consequence of a broken vow and a foul murder we find (p. 147) that the crosses were removed from the altar to the ground, that the community was refused baptism and communion, and that in a full synod King Meurig, the offender, was laid under this curse :—"May his days be few, may his children be orphans, and may his wife be a widow." An excommunication affects only the perpetrators of crimes ; while an "interdict is indiscriminating in its censure and condemns a whole nation, and that commonly for no crime." The time when interdicts were first promulgated seems to be a matter of dispute. Protestant writers seem to think that Gregory VII (=Hildebrand, 1015-1085) "was the originator of them, as he mentions them in his letters." Morinus thinks interdicts were earlier, and Habertus makes them as ancient as St. Basil who said that "when the whole church make themselves partakers of another man's sins they may be censured together."

who took an ecclesiastical, not to say a Llandavian view of history. It is not without a purpose that Dubricius, Teilo and Oudoceus are styled archbishops, rather than bishops. And particularly the journey of Teilo, David, and Padarn to Jerusalem is cunningly and ingeniously introduced[42]. Giraldus Cambrensis says that, in the time of Bishop Bernard, the Chapter of St. David's earnestly entreated Honorius II. to restore to St. David's the metropolitan[43] authority which had been transferred to Dol by St. Samson. Moreover in the year 1135 Henry of Huntingdon states that the 'Bishop of St. David's has received a pallium from the Pope tempore nostro;' which would have the effect of establishing its supremacy over Llan Dâv[43]. However, the author of the life of Teilo was equal to the occasion—he skilfully goes behind the controversy of his age, and shows how at Jerusalem the clergy there, instructed by an angel from heaven, proclaim Teilo to be 'exalted above his brethren' David and Padarn[43]. After this consecration at Jerusalem, Padarn was presented with a [44]staff

[42] See pages 103-107 of the text. The journey to Jerusalem is given also in the Life of St. David, which is alledged to have been written by Ricemarch (Cambro British Saints, pp. 102-144). In that life, St. David seems to receive all the gifts including the bell! Whether Rhygyvarch did or did not write a life of St. David seems to me an open question. In its present form it is almost certain that it is later than the pallium incident of 1135; and all the MSS. of it are later than the original of our text.

[43] Haddan and Studds' Councils, pp. 317; 344; 382-3.

[44] The name of Padarn's staff is Cirguen. Mr. Phillimore tells me that the 'Cerirguen' of the Cambro-British SS., p. 190, is a misreading of the MS., and he compares the name in the following quatrain in a 11th century MS. of S. Augustine De Trinitate in the Library of C.C.C. Cantab.

Amdinnit trynit trylenn and choral cope, because it was observed that he was an excellent singer; St. David received a wonderful altar; but to 'Blessed Teilo, the Pontifex,' was given a Bell more famous than great, more precious than beautiful, for in sweetness of sound it seemed to excel every organ; it condemned the perjured, it healed the sick, and what is far more wonderful, it kept sounding every hour without being moved until, by the rash and constant handling of sinful men, it ceased from its sweet services.[42] Teilo 'the pontifex' receives the pastoral care of the church of Llan Dâv together with the adjoining[45] diocese which his predecessor Dubricius had held; and like as a bell invites men from sleep and slothfulness to the church, so Teilo by his preaching invited them to heaven. Then comes the Yellow Pestilence, which appears as a column of watery cloud, having one end trailing along the ground, and the other on high sweeping through the air, traversing the country like a shower passing through the bottom of valleys.[42]

Passages such as these exhibit the consummate literary artist; while Bernard's pallium, real or imaginary, sheds a flood of light on the introduction of the journey[42] to Jerusalem with its special glorification of Teilo, and confirms, in a very unexpected manner, the palæographical evidence that the composition is later than the time of Urban. In fact the [45] There is no church I believe dedicated to Dubricius outside Erging; there is no mention of him in the Book of St. Chad, which was placed on the altar of Teilo; Nobis signs himself bishop Teliav; while the above passage confirms the supposition that Teilo, not Dubricius, founded Ll. Dâv. When Urban rebuilt the Cathedral he rededicated it, and introduced the names of Dubricius & Ondoceus in order to claim their churches from Hereford & S. David's respectively.

more one examines the subject the more reason one finds for attributing the composition to the time of Geoffrey's residence at Llan Dâv; while the text itself at times forcibly reminds one of the Historia Regum[46] Britanniæ. Moreover, among Latin MSS., the two works are distinguished by this striking characteristic in common—the orthography[47] of the Welsh names is singularly accurate in both, a fact that Mr. Phillimore would have me emphasize. And when we recollect that Geoffrey died suddenly while attending Mass[48] in 1154, we seem to receive an explanation of the unfinished state of the original manuscript, whose historical value is neither enhanced nor diminished by such a conclusion. Every statement should be taken by itself, and tested in a scientific way. Even the most extravagant story may have a core of fact. The modern idea that Geoffrey 'invented everything' is quite as unreasonable as the old attitude which accepted all he said as serious history.

The judicial spirit will avoid uncritical extremes, and bear in mind that if none of the documents of the Liber Landavensis, in their present [49]form, 'can [46] It would be very interesting to learn the result of a careful comparison of the style and language of the Hist. Reg. Britanniæ with that of the Life of Teilo. It is to be hoped that a competent student of Mediæval Latin will take the matter into his consideration.

[47] I need hardly explain that I mean the orthography of the best MSS. of the Hist. Reg. Britanniæ, not that of the printed editions.

[48] The Bruts, edited by Rhys & Evans, 1890, p. 318.

[49] Haddan & Stubbs' Councils, p. 126; and on p. 147 we are told that the Liber Landavensis "preceded Geoffrey of Monmouth and is wholly free from the legends about King Arthur, with which a few years later it would inevitably have been filled; as it is also (naturally) from the S. David's fictions about "Archbishop" Samson, which occur first in Giraldus. But the internal evidence of the book is sufficient to prove that all the earlier charters contained in it were not contemporary with their professed dates . . . . . the closely claim earlier date than the 10th, or possibly in some cases the 9th' century, still 'the bare facts alleged by them may probably be admitted upon their evidence, and are likely in themselves.' But apart from probability and internal evidence, the marginal and other entries[50] in the BOOK OF ST. CHAD prove beyond possibility of doubt that some sort of record was kept at ILan Dâv at least as early as the ninth century; it also proves that there was a bishop Nobis[51] at ILan Dâv, and thus establishes in a very satisfactory manner that, when documents had been taken away or lost, our compiler did not invent but was content, as in the case of Elvogus, Nobis, and Marchluid, with merely registering the bishops' names.

Eu henw gawn, dyna i gŷd.

parallel charters of the abbey of Llancarvan in the Vita S. Cadoci (Cambro-Brit. SS. 86-93) are of a similar character. The same lands indeed are in some cases granted by the same persons and for the same expressed reasons to Landaff [see pp. 180-2; 210 of our text] and to Llancarvan in the V.S. Cadoci," pp. 92-93. Again on p. 44 we read that "the general tenor of Geoffrey of Monmouth's narrative (obvious fable apart) is in accordance with probability, so far as regards the fortunes and acts of the British Church. Its details are wholly untrustworthy." We are further told (p. 142) that Geoffrey and Giraldus "are the first writers that systematically invent British and Welsh Archbishoprics respectively."

The reader will do well to note (1) that the Liber Landavensis is not free from the Archiepiscopal "fictions"; (2) that the original scribe left columns 100-110 blank in the Gwysaney MS., a fact which implies that he had more to add about Dubricius; (3) that the references to the Archbishoprics of Kaer Evrog and Kaer Llion ar Wysc (see the Bruts, pp. 169; 184) may be later interpolations; there is no reference to Dubricius crowning Arthur in the Epistola ad Warinam; (4) that the earliest MS. of the life of S. Cadoc is about half a century later than the Gwysaney MS., and therefore can have borrowed the parallelisms (which are very slight) from it; and (5) that the allegation that Geoffrey was Arthur-mad and could write nothing without introducing this hero is merely a pious superstition, which rests on no basis of fact. The most that can be said about Geoffrey is, that he cultivated the Arthurian germ and tried the experiment of innoculation. The period of incubation seems to have lasted fully a generation after he was laid in his grave. It was about 1175 the infection began to spread with marvellous developments, and the effects are traceable through the centuries down to our day.

[50] See p. xlvii. According to the Annales Cambriæ there was a Bishop Nobis at St. David's, 840-873. Probably this is a case of translation from Ll. Dâv to St. David's rather than of two men bearing a common name.

[51] B represents probably more than one hand. The writing of cols. 1—8 resembles that of A; a fresh hand possibly begins with col. 9, and perhaps another with l. 18 of col. 13. It is only towards the end of this hand that different hands begin and end, together with their approximate dates; it is therefore unnecessary to discuss each hand separately. The facsimiles facing pages 27, 29, & 230 show the exact size of the original MS.—the others are reduced more or less.

Signs or contractions are numerous in the manuscript. To have reproduced these would have been to make the text unreadable to the great majority of the subscribers; while the customary method of expanding them by the use of italics (that makeshift expedient of Philistine printers) is injurious as well as offensive to the sight. For example:—

A new method has therefore been devised for the expansion of contractions, that of simply underdotting the ordinary types; a method which is at once distinctive without being obtrusive, or in any way injurious to the eyes or p*at*chy i*n* ap*pear*anc*e*.

Britannia is used for Brittany in our text. K*b* is in the hand which cut down by one-half the tithes in K*a*, so that the Summae are false. L is in 4 distinct hands. The reader can distinguish R's 16 different hands by the extra distances between the lines of the text; while the later additions from various pens are placed within brackets. Many of the Marginal hands are represented in our facsimiles; and the reader by reference to the printed text of the Marginalia, can make out the classification of these hands, which with only one important exception belong to the 15th century. Marginal hand V, except for the rustier ink, resembles that of the Cottonian copy of the Book of Ll. Dâv in Vitel. C. 10.

The characters aeioubcdhmnprstv ę, ꝼ, ꝛ, ꝛ, ꝛ were specially cut[52] for this work; and the following is a complete list of the peculiar types used in it, together with their interpretation:—ę=æ; ꝼ=f; ꞡ=g; ꝛ=r; ꝛ=r; ꝛ=f; Ꝑ=W; ꝑ=w; ꝝ=Y; ꝝ (final)=ch or z; and ꝺ or ꝺ=th in '*th*ee,' i.e. the dental spirant voiced. A B C C D E I J M N O P P Q R S T V ꝶ represent letters patched with red in the original, while ITALIC CAPITALS represent letters patched with yellow, and E H J N P R S those patched with both red and yellow.

Words italicised in the text have in the MS. a yellow line drawn horizontally through them. All proper names, as well as the dates at the end of the Bulls in hand D*b* probably had this line across them originally; but the yellow is now in most instances so very faint as to be practically invisible. No notice is therefore taken of any of the doubtful cases.

LARGE CAPITALS, [54]HEAD-LINES, Headings of Chapters, printed in any of these heavy-faced types, are all written in red ink in the original; while the open[55] Capitals and everything worded in English represent blanks in the manuscript.

[52] I have to thank Messrs Miller & Richards of Edinburgh, facile principes among type founders, for the care with which the punches of the underdotted types were cut so as to secure an even effect when several letters are placed side by side.

[53] In the Head-lines (which are those on a level with the paging of a book) the word Episcopus is spelt in two ways—EPISCOPVS represents a full spelling in the MS, and EPISCOPUS the contracted form EP'S.

[54] See first letter of pp. 25, 26, 30, &c., &c.

In the preparation of the Book of Llan Dâv the aim has been to reproduce letter for letter the text of the MS., neither adding, omitting, nor amending, even when the reading is obviously erroneous. And as with the previous volumes of the Series, so with this, the transcribing of the manuscript and all press arrangements devolved upon the writer. As soon as the transcript had been set up in type it was laid aside, and every proof-sheet was collated with the original, once by Professor Rhys and thrice by the writer; while both, as a rule, also read one of the three proofs of each sheet without reference to the MS. Moreover, after the book had passed through the press, the writer again collated the entire text with the original; and he has thus been able to notice in the Palæographical Notes a few errata, chiefly due to breakages and transpositions of type in passing the sheets through the printing machine. If therefore any departure from the reading of the MS. remains still undetected in the printed work, it cannot be attributed to want of care.

For the Appendices and Index I must accept the sole responsibility. And if it cannot be said that the same painful degree of precaution to secure so large a measure of accuracy has been taken with pages 335-424 as with those preceding, still less has there been anything bordering on carelessness; while in point of time and labour this part represents the greater half of the work.

The text of Appendix I, which is now printed for the first time, was often difficult to read, owing to the bad preservation of this part of the [59]MS. In the case of the tithes on pages 327-331, it was found necessary to express the amounts by figures rather than by letters: this deviation from a strict reproduction of the original was unavoidable, on account of the double columns. The list of the deaneries and churches on pages 318-326, should be compared with a similar, but older list in Cotton MS. Vitellius C. 10.[55] The student of 'prices,' or the comparative value of money in the 13th and 14th centuries, will find the comparison instructive.

The MARGINALIA which repeat the text verbatim et literatim have been omitted; but all those which differ from it in the slightest degree, if only in orthography, have been included in APPENDIX II, and have been revised twice with the original. Some of them are by no means easy to read, while the bulk of them seem to have no particular interest. Still, it was thought best to include everything irrespective of its apparent value, because an important fact may sometimes lurk behind what looks to the uninitiated like a commonplace remark.

The lives of Dubricius, Teliau, and Clitauc in Cotton MS. Vesp. A. 14, are simply imperfect tran-

[55] The Estimaciones (folios 104*b*-110*b*) of the Cotton MS. were written in the time of Henry III; and the Taxatio (folios 115*a*-118*a*) in the time of Edward I. The list of churches correspond very nearly with that on pages 318-331 of this work. I once intended to give this list as an Appendix, and copied the whole with that view; but as Mr. Clark has already printed it in his Cartæ et Alia Munimenta de Glamorgan vol. iii, I have abandoned my original plan. The orthography of Mr. Clark's readings should be accepted with caution. The MS. contains similar lists of the dioceses of St. Asaph (fol. 111*a*-114*b*), and of Bangor (fol. 119*a* &c.) There is no mention of the diocese of St. David's.

scripts of the lives of these saints from the Gwysaney MS. Still, as I had collated our text with the Vespasian copy I have given the result in APPENDIX III; but, it must be confessed, without revising the proofs of the VARIANT READINGS with the Cotton MS.

APPENDIX IV contains translations of all the boundaries given in Welsh. Prof. Rhys shares the responsibility for the sense of these, but not for the wording, [56]spelling, or italicised additions. Many places could not be identified, many more remained doubtful; and to modernize the spelling in such instances would be to mislead the reader. In many cases, therefore, the orthography of the text is followed, even so far as to spell some names in two ways even in the same boundary. In cases where the places are known, I have assumed that the orthography should bear some relation to the sound and accent, and that separate words should not be joined together. It not unfrequently happens that the same place-names are variously accented in different parts of Wales. For instance, if I write Llanarth, Penarth, Groeswen according to the received usage, who can tell me how to pronounce these? But if we were to restrict this spelling to those cases where the first syllable is accented, and write Llan Arth, Pen Arth, Groes Wen when the stress falls on the final element the difficulty would be removed. In the former case

[56] I wish it to be clearly understood that I have not attempted to set up a new system of spelling the modernized forms, for every Welsh Press has a system of its own already. I have generally kept as close as I could to the original orthography in order to call attention to it.

the emphasized first syllable shows that the two elements have become fused together, forming a genuine compound word; whilst in the latter case the fact that the second part retains the accent proves that there has been no such fusion, and that we have to deal with two separate words, which it is therefore (apart from all phonetic considerations) incorrect to treat as a compound.

Again, in modernizing the Old Welsh plural termination -ou (-eu in Middle Welsh) I have deliberately rejected the unhistorical and irrational -au form of Welsh printers; and for this reason: There is no evidence at all that there ever was a time when this -au was so pronounced in any commote of Wales. Over more than three-fourths of the Principality one never hears anything but -è; while over the remaining fraction the sound approaches that of -a. The earliest known instance of this perversion occurs in the MS. of a writer from Beth Gelart, who, having perhaps noticed that Mid. Welsh -ei- had in his time become -ai- in monosyllables, thought therefore he would simplify matters not only by extending the innovation to unaccented syllables (where no corresponding change of sound had or has taken place), but also by altering -eu into -au, despite the fact that the accent never falls on it. Besides, the etymological analogy is against such a change. The rising generation of my countrymen would do well to consider whether the laws of sound and the practice of centuries should be set aside merely to follow a [57]bard. Why should we discard the example of our best MSS? If we change the -eu at all, we should adopt its present phonetic value in the mouth of the great majority of Welshmen, and write simply -è. We should thus stand on solid ground, both historically and linguistically.

In our text the letter u has to do duty not only for the vowels u and w, but also for w as a semi-vowel, as well as for f=v. As a vowel it is retained or changed into w in accordance with Mod. Welsh usage; as a consonant it is changed into v; while as a semi-vowel always following g- it is retained for the convenience of non-Welsh readers, after the analogy of queen, Guinevere, Guise, and Guido. It is much to be desired that we should restore to the Welsh alphabet the character ȣ, used in the Golden Age of our literature, to represent w as a vowel. We should not meet with Welshmen unable to distinguish between the w in 'gwyn' and the w in 'Ꞡwyn,' if the latter were written Ꞡȣyn, and the former kept unchanged.

In the first draft of the INDEX every name was entered in a strictly alphabetical order according to the orthography of the text. When, however, the work had been completed on these lines, it was often found that the references to a single individual, owing to variations of spelling, had become widely separated under half a dozen or more headings, and would therefore have required a bewildering number of cross-references. Consequently the modifications explained on page 385 had to be introduced—modifications which made it necessary to recast and rewrite the whole. In cases where the orthography still presented a difficulty, the variants had to be grouped together under the leading form, as well as to be entered independently and provided with cross-references; while variations too slight to be reproduced are indicated by italicising the references. Besides, until the first draft made it possible to refer to every name in the text, it was not feasible to apply the 'witness test' to the chronology, and as a consequence separate individualities bearing identical names had now and again been merged together. Still, as this and other tests left some difficulties unsolved, it can hardly be expected that the INDEX should be altogether free from errors arising from confusion of persons. But among such must not be reckoned those cases where the separate identities have been marked off by placing a colon (in place of the usual semi-colon) between the figures, although a common heading does duty for two men of like name. It is a curious fact that names of clerics and laics seem to run in pairs throughout the documents; but all confusion from this source has been obviated by the addition of the letter c. or l. after their respective names. Besides, the insertion of these and other differentiating letters will greatly facilitate reference, and practically answer the same purpose as if the lines of the page had been given. The reader will further note that Cp. or cp. (=compare) has a three-fold signification, that of calling attention (1) to some difference in the forms of a name without distinction of personality, (2) to some similarity of forms without identity of persons, or (3) to cases which the writer could not determine one way or the other with any degree of certainty.

In addition to the names of persons mentioned directly in the text, the names of their fathers, and the second elements of compound place-names have headings of their own. Another feature introduced into the INDEX has been the inclusion of the modern forms of the ancient names of places and streams, wherever these have been[58] identified. If the list of possible identifications has not been exhausted, at all events it has been considerably shortened; and if those living in certain neighbourhoods could be induced to interest themselves in the matter, there is no reason why the list should not practically be reduced to a minimum. It would then be possible to carry out the idea of constructing a map of the diocese of Bishop Urban. With a view to this end may I ask every reader who makes a fresh identification, or discovers a mistaken one, to communicate the fact to me?

[58] It is only he who has attempted to identify Old Place-names, often with no better help than such a broken reed as the Ordnance Survey Maps, can form any conception of the difficulty and tediousness of the task. It is not how much time it takes to make your identifications, but how much fruitless labour you spend on those places which baffle your inquiries. Frequently nothing but old charters can solve difficulties; still there are numerous cases where the native of the district specified, and he alone can give the information wanted. For instance, take Isceviog and Meithini near Llan Deilo Vowr. I had found on the Ordnance Maps Iscaio and Myðyfai, but who could dream from such orthography that these places are pronounced Skeio and Miðivi respectively, as Mr. Lleuver Thomas tells me. Mr. Llywarch Reynolds has similarly solved other difficulties by making special pilgrimages to certain localities; and I have to thank the Rev. R. J. Jones for making inquiries about Gavannog. In attempting these identifications I have travelled entirely outside the scope of the Series of Old Welsh Texts, and punished myself by a year's hard labour. Without Notes it was not possible to indicate either the sources of the information, or the neighbourhoods in which certain places should be looked for. Among the works consulted were the following: (1) P. Nicholai Taxatio Ecclesiastica; (2) Valor Ecclesiasticus; (3) Calendarium Inquisitionum post mortem; (4) Le Neve Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae; (5) Jaffé's Regesta Pontificum Romanorum; (6) Bibliothèque de l'école des Chartes, 1879, Vol. 40, pp. 154-194; (7) Ughelli Italia Sacra; (8) Trésor de Chronologie; (9) Foundation Charters in Monasticon Anglicanum; (10) Cartæ.....de Glamorgan; (11) Liber Landavensis, 1840; (12) Wakeman's Notes at the end of Cambro-British Saints; (13) Rice Rees's Essay on Welsh Saints; (14) Lewis's Topographical Dictionary of Wales.

It is now my pleasant duty to acknowledge help of various kinds.

First of all hearty thanks are due to Mr. Davies Cooke for his permission to reproduce the MS., and for placing it in the Bodleian Library for the convenience of the editors. But I desire in a more special way to express my gratitude to the owner of the MS. for his courteous and friendly readiness to meet my wishes and difficulties of various kinds, and for allowing time to do deliberately a work which otherwise would have been better left undone.

To the Marquess of Bute the subscribers are indebted for the expensive manner in which the book has been 'got up.' I use the word subscribers advisedly, for the gain is entirely theirs; and I am sure they will feel with me that it is a matter of congratulation for us all, that there is at least one nobleman connected with Wales who takes a scholar's interest in her literature and her history, and who is ever ready to promote the knowledge of both.

Since the present work was begun one of its warmest friends has passed away; and it is only just to the memory of Mr. James Andrew Corbett, editor of A Booke of Glamorganshires Antiquities by Rice Merrick, to place on record here that his strong interest in the subject matter of the BOOK OF LLAN DÂV exercised a determining force in undertaking its preparation. Moreover, it is to the Memorial Fund raised by his friends that we are indebted for the liberal number of Autotype Facsimiles, which illustrate the text and so greatly add to its interest. The name of Mr. Floyd should be specially mentioned in this connection.

At the commencement of this work Mr. Egerton Phillimore offered to read the sheets (without reference to the MS.) as they passed through the press: this he faithfully did, querying everything that struck him as being in any way peculiar. All passages so marked were afterwards collated with the MS. by the writer; and if the harvest proved out of all proportion to the labour, the gain, at least negatively, was very considerable, as various irregularities thus singled out had to pass a special test. A similar examination of the Place-names in the INDEX was fruitful of results. Here Mr. Phillimore's long study of the topography of the Liber Landavensis, has enabled him to add to the number of identifications. A good many new identifications have been made by both of us independently, others by one of us only. Those specially contributed by Mr. Phillimore are marked by an asterisk, as for instance:

If there is safety in a multitude of counsels this book ought to be pre-eminently safe. Whenever there was a doubt about the reading of any word or part of a word, the opinion of fellow-workers in the Bodleian Library was always [59]consulted ; and every fresh suggestion on any reading has been credited to its author in the Palæographical Notes. Still, I must not omit to record here my obligation to the Rev. W. D. Macray for help of many kinds, rendered invariably with so much readiness and urbanity as to make one feel doubly grateful. I have also to thank the University Lecturer in Palæography for allowing me to consult him frequently ; while I am indebted to my friend, Mr. W. H. Stevenson of the Record Office, for assistance in reading certain passages in APPENDIX I, which others had declared to be illegible ; and to Sir Thomas Bodley's Librarian for his uniform kindness in undertaking the charge of MSS. deposited in the library for my use. I should also be ungrateful if I failed to acknowledge the personal interest taken in this book by my friend, Mr. John Bellows of Gloucester, who in matters connected with the press work has furthered my wishes in all [59] This remark applies almost exclusively to the text of Appendix I, as the formation of the letters in hand A is mostly very distinct with the exception of the letter l, which initially may be easily confused with I in a few proper names. The specialist should bear this in mind, because if he has good reasons for thinking that a name printed with an initial I should have an l, or vice versa, he might be justified in substituting the one for the other in a few cases. But an l can never take the place of J, nor an L that of either I or J. Here and there it was difficult to distinguish with certainty between iu and ui, in, ni, and m, especially in hands B and D ; but it struck me that the distance between the two limbs of n and u was greater than between that of the i and the limb of the n or u flanking it ; while the limbs of m had even distances between them. The "clubbing" too seemed a trifle different. I was therefore guided by these appearances in cases of difficulty. See PALÆO. NOTES.

respects, and has cut, at his own expense, many of the large capitals. But I must not, to paraphrase Mr. Ruskin's words, permit the chance of any names mentioned being in any wise associated with my errors. Much of the work has been done obstinately in my own way; and even Prof. Rhys is never responsible for me, though he has often kept me right, or at least enabled me to advance in a right direction. Absolutely correct no one can be; nor does a day pass without convincing every honest student of some partial error, and showing him better how to do, and where to look.

J. GWENOGVRYN EVANS.

Festo Sancti Teliaui, 1893.

P.S. The EXTRACTS from the BOOK OF ST. CHAD follow here at the end of the PREFACE, because it was thought that several facsimiles coming together would (if placed at the end of the APPENDICES) interfere with a ready reference to the INDEX.

St. Chad, 'a Northumbrian by birth, spent his early years in Ireland, then the centre of intellectual life.' He became the fifth bishop of the Mercians, and was the founder and first bishop of the see of Lichfield, where he died on March 2, 672. The BOOK OF ST. CHAD, which was written in Ireland probably before 700, 'consists of 110 stout vellum leaves and contains the Old Latin Gospels (of SS. Matthew and Mark complete, and of S. Luke down to Chap. iii, 9 exciditur) as they existed in the period before the Roman Vulgate version had finally assumed its stereotyped form.' In other words it follows Jerome's version only partially. Dr. Scrivener deals with the subject exhaustively in the Prolegomena to his edition of the Codex Ceaddae Latinus (Cantab. 1887).

The Marginal and other entries, which were made in the MS. during its stay at Llan Dâv, alone concern our present purpose. EXTRACT 1 explains how this copy of the Gospels came to be placed on the altar of St. Teilo; and we may surmise that this was the very book which the petty Kings of Guent and Morgannwg in the ninth century carried on their backs when making the circuit of boundaries, and on which they took their solemn oaths. When the MS. was removed to Lichfield, and in consequence named the BOOK OF ST. CHAD, is not known; but it could not have been later than the time of Bishop Wynsi (974-992), whose name is on page 1. It is unfortunate that Prof. Rhys has not yet had the opportunity of examining the BOOK OF ST. CHAD. We have discussed the following readings together with the facsimiles before us, but as I alone examined the original, it would be unfair for me not to accept the full responsibility for the text, especially of the Marginalia, p. xlvii. See Note at end of page xlviii.

Tudvwlch, the son of Liwid and son-in-law of Tudri, arose to claim the land of Telich, which was in the possession of Elcu, the son of Gelhi, and the tribe of Judguored : he complained long about it : at last they dispossess the son-in-law of Tudri of his right : the nobles said to one another 'let us make peace': Elcu gave afterwards a horse, three cows, three newly calved cows, provided only there be no hostility between them from this reconciliation thenceforward till the day of doom : Tudvwlch and his people will require afterwards no title for ever and ever. Witness Teilo, &c. J.R.

The foregoing translation is merely tentative. Haioid is in Modern Welsh a oeð 'which was' : so far as I know the inserted i occurs only in Breton, from which Zeuss quotes a yoa, a ioa (Gram. Celtica, ed. Ebel, p. 548). In ilau l does duty for ll as in the Juvencus Triplets (Skene's Four Ancient Books of Wales, ii., 1, 2) : similarly luidt 'a tribe' is entitled to ll, and so is pel=Mod. Welsh pell 'far' : the word is also found applied to time, as in the Black Book (Evans' Autotype ed., p. 54[a]) and in the modern bellach

'now at length.' Gelhig would seem to date earlier than the shorter Gelhi; but as the name is obscure the value of the h is doubtful. For it might be that of χ as in Telih, or else lh may have been intended for ll. This, however, does not exhaust the possibilities as proved by other words in point, such as ha 'and,' ha 'who, which,' ho 'from'—in all three the h was inorganic: medichat = medic-hât—here we might have expected medichágat = medic-hag-at. Lastly, we have h in ch (=χ) in erchim to 'ask or demand', and in uache, which gives the Welsh scribe's pronunciation of the Latin vacæ 'cows'; but the same sound of ch is represented by c in Tutbulc, later Tudvwlch, and it is worth noticing that c regularly stands for ch in the Juvencus Triplets. I can, however, only regard c (for ch) as derived from cc, which is proved to have been the early Welsh spelling by the borrowed use of it in Irish Ogam inscriptions. That is to say, the Welsh, who changed the sound of every cc to ch, appear to have continued to write cc until that came to be carelessly written c or superseded by ch. To be more exact, the use of ch was at first perhaps confined, as in the present instances, to che, chi, and the antiquity of that spelling is proved by an occasional inscription with such a form as Decheti (Hübner, No. 26), and by the agreement with Italian orthography, which has che, chi for ke, ki. As c does duty for cc=ch, so we have p for pp (=ph or ff) in the name Gripiud, now written in Welsh Gruffuδ, Anglicized Griffith. According to this analogy we should have t for tt=th, but instead of that we have dt as in luidt, now llwyth 'a tribe.' This differs from the Juvencus Triplets where we have d for th as well as for δ; but the t (= δ of other manuscripts) was doubtless derived from tt = th. Amgucant has been translated here as the T Preterite of am-guo-can-, in Modern Welsh ymogan-u which Pughe renders "to ridicule one's self; to banter mutually." Amtanndi would seem to mean 'respecting her' in reference, probably, to Tir Telih; but tir is otherwise only known to me as a masculine. The difficulty is, however, not a very serious one as tir was originally a neuter, and hesitation between masculine and feminine is by no means unusual in such cases. The prefix in imguodant might be expected to have been am as in amtanndi and amgucant; but neither am nor im perhaps accurately represented the sound, which was probably m̥. I have ventured with much hesitation to treat imguodant as if standing for imguotant, corresponding to a third singular imguaut parallel with dy-waut 'dixit' and from the same root, which in the present tense was guet, now gwed as in dy-wed-yd to 'say.' Guragun seems to be the old form of Mod. Welsh gwnawn 'let us make' (Rev. Celtique vi. 31). In tagc the g stands, as commonly in later Welsh manuscripts, for ng. I take degion to be the plural of the adjective dag, now da 'good': hence the use of the article ir 'the'—the other ir is now er 'for, in consideration of.' Rodesit is an aorist like the Gaulish legasit 'posuit,' and the termination is it (rhyming with words ending in Mod. Welsh in -yd) as in pregethyssit '(he) taught or preached to' (Skene's Four Anc. Bks. ii. 181) and other instances to be found especially in the Book of Aneurin: the -it, now wholly gone, was only retained when the verb was not compounded or preceded by a particle, the rule being approximately that observed in Irish as to forms absolute and conjoint. Igridu looks as if some confusion had here happened between di[n]-gridu for diri[n]gdu and ithridu from ithr 'inter.'

Notes on EXTRACTS 1-8. The writing of No. 1 is probably earlier than A.D. 814, when Gripiud died. No. 2 is a copy of a document of Teilo's time. Nos. 3, 4, 5, are earlier than A.D. 840, when apparently Bp. Nobis was translated to St. David's. No. 5, the letters within square brackets are so many guesses, and should be regarded in cases like Necesse est as suggestions rather than solutions. Line 2, et* = ? Etelic or Etern, who belong to this time. Line 3, atque—the tq is certain I think: confirmatio is probably the wrong word but it conveys the sense. Line 4,—Coram is the usual word but I doubt if it was the one used in the MS. Line 5,—the first limb of r in Coffro is faint but the second is distinct. Guen = Guen-cat or -vor, or -gale : *r = ? Gueir or Greir, but the r is possibly an s followed by a stop (.)—in that case Cors or Ilias would be probable names: dan, or ? []*dan—the letter in front of -dan is so very like e as to make Aidan inadmissible: Ov* = ? Ourdol or Oudem : the -im of Guurcinnim is more like -im than -un while it is unlike -nn : merchguinn, or ? merchiaun—more like -inn than -aun. Line 7, Dubrino or ? Dubrmo.

The writing of extracts 6, 7, and the Marginalia of 8 seem to belong to the end of the 8th and beginning of the 9th centuries excepting what was written after the removal of the manuscript to Lichfield Cathedral. There are erasures on pp. 1, 3, 5, 7. The binder has cut off the top half of many words, and two names each on pp. 225, & 228 have as yet baffled my efforts to read. See p. xlvii.

In the case of oit, the oi have been altered later into alt. *The italicised letters in the following are faint and doubtful: urpci*bre; merciauni; dies*ri*; mor*cim*eisi, or more*nn*cisi, or mor*cim*cisi (cp. Morcimbris). Before judou there is something like a z—the ju may be read ri, and the o may be c. The r in hanca*r*ate was suggested to me by Prof. Rhys—I mistook it for n. The a in as*a*hail, cidr*a*mi (? cidra*i*ni), bl*a*inone is similarly formed in all cases, and resembles the a in the writing of extract 6. Thus all the Marginalia in the Book of St. Chad are accounted for, excepting probatio penne p. 1, and nomine do*m*ini, p. 15, together with two extracts—one in Old Eng. and the other full of Eng. proper names—see that part of facsimile facing p. xliii, which is in a mixture of Greek, Roman, and Old Eng. characters. Both Extracts, as my friend Prof. Napier pointed out to me, have been given long ago by Wanley, Hicks, & Thorpe.

I have to thank the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield Cathedral for permission to use the BOOK OF ST. CHAD; and Canon Lonsdale for facilitating my work thereon. The facsimiles were taken by the Clarendon Press, under disadvantages however from the weather. Had the MS. been placed in the Bodleian the facsimiles would have been better done; and in the course of a few weeks it might have been possible to read all the Marginalia.

SANCTUS ISTE FRATRES KARISSIMI AB infantia dei cultor extitit. Nec mirum. cum ante infantiam eum futurum ſibi ſeruum deuſ predeſtinaſſet. Predeſtinauit quem elegit. elegit quem dilexit ⁄ dilectumque uerę confeſſioniſ palma coronauit. Militauit itaque uir dei deo. orationibus inſiſtendo. omniaque quę poſſidebat indigentibus erogando. Quid ampliuſ? Sex opera miſericordię diligenter exequtuſ. Nunquam dei famulus ab ęcclesiaſticiſ uacabat inſtitutiſ. Omnia ſua faciebat non ſua. & quę non erant ſua ⁄ faciebat ſua. Nichil enim reliqui ſibi deſuo relinquenſ. bene caduca pro ęterniſ cambiebat. O quantuſ & qualiſ mercator qui ſua deo dabat ⁄ ut abeo centuplum acciperet. O commercium pretioſum. O uſura laudabiliſ ⁄ O fenuſ ſine crimine. O lucrum ſine reprehenſione. Lucremur igitur ſic noſmetipſoſ fratreſ ⁄ ut lucrum non perdat feneratoreſ. O quantę ſapientię & ſcientię uirum. qui ſua aliiſ diſtribuebat ut diteſceret ⁄ ſeipſum macerabat ut alioſ impingueſceret. Aliorum miſerebatur. ut miſericordiam conſequeretur. Talia equidem conſtat ſancti uiri fuiſſe rudimenta ⁄ inquibus perſeue[112]rabat ſine intermiſſione uſque in conſummationem uitę. Egregiuſ igitur confeſſor fuit ⁄ qui preter uirtuteſ quid confiteretur non habuit. Quippe. bonuſ ininfantia. iniuuentute melior. in ſenectute optimus. Sed ne tanti uiri genuſ taceatur.

quaſi neſcitum ⁄ exnobilibus illum parentibus ſcimuſ fuiſſe ortum. ut carnis nobilitaſ honeſtaret eum inter homines. qui iam animi nobilitate apud deum erat acceptabiliſ. Poſt incrementum autem ętatiſ uirtutum & ſapientię ⁄ congruo nomine ELIOS a ſapientibus nuncupatuſ eſt. ELioſ autem grece ⁄ Latine ſol interpretatur. 249	2	cu*n*cto. Wr. cu*i*cto in MS. and the ic altered lr. into n.
	27	*c*um familia. Altered from f.
251	12	L*i*sguern. Altered later into L*an*guern.
	15	b*l*edri. Altered from e. Note b*e*dri l. 1, above.
253	15	priuiZegio. Wr. over an erasure; ? later.
	23	f*r*aude. Altered later from l.
254	27	t*e*iui. Wr. over an erasure in blacker ink.
255	5	tan|tu*nt*um. Altered from m. Read tantum.
	21	XXXII. and XXXIII. (l. 22) are placed after the words on the inside margin; also XXXVI. (line 24) after the word "meilic|".
	23	g*r*atlaun. Altered from l.
256	13	*f*niquum. Completely erased in MS.
257	4	*f*acerdos. Wr. over an erasure.
	7	gu*e*bric. It is difficult to decide whether this letter should be read c or e; if it was or. c it was once altered to e and then, apparently, altered back again by partial erasure to c. Cp. "*e*ius"
259	4	A stop, at end of line, broken in the printing machine. [l. 13.
260	6	gist*l*erth. Altered from r, or vice versa.
261	28	gu*l*frit. Altered from r.
262	23	fo*rd*. Wr. over an erasure.
263	2	crucmar̃c. This contraction is not used elsewhere in this MS. ? crucmarc*han*, or crucm*ra*chan. Cp. Marchan & Brachan.
	27	nantb*r*achan. Altered from a partially erased l.
264	17	e*iui*d. Neutrally formed letters which might be read iiii, but not uu as on p. 265, l. 13, where however we should, perhaps, read e*uii*d.
266	4	facerdotalem dignitatem feliciter landauensis ecclesie eius. Wr. (? over erasure) in a dif. hand.
	11	summo archiepiscopo Cynisi. & abaliis anglie plurimis episcopis canonice consummata est. In a different hand.
268	17	teudu*r*. Altered into "f"; ? later.
	27	*c*led. Not quite normal in form.
	28	guorlu*r*ch. Altered from c apparently.
271	13	in sanctis s*uis*. In the MS. s*uis* is represented by ". f." which
272	13	bet*if*ord. Wr. over an erasure. [stands for s*cilicet* everywhere else.
	26	inebri*e*ta. Altered later into what resembles o rather than a. Read

281	4	ini*m*icos. ini*n*icos in MS.
	5	misericordiam. Mr Haddan reads ueniam !
	8	. The beginning of the statement of the duties of the Archdeacon of Llann Dâv, written on a piece of vellum (or paper), was originally pasted over the Postcommunio (ll. 1-6). This piece got detached, and is now lost. Mr Haddan's statement that "the first words were erased" "to make room for" the Postcommunio is inexplicable, as is also his opinion that the Postcommunio was written later than the rest of the folio. See Arch. Cambrensis, 1868, Third Series, Vol. XIV, p. 319.
	9	to the end of page 283. The whole of this text has been inked over by a later hand, with the result that portions of the text are difficult to read, as may be inferred from the extraordinary misreadings in the few passages printed by Mr Haddan.
	10	eiu*s*. The one who retraced this folio has altered the s into the contraction mark for us, thus reading eiu*us*. Mr Haddan reads suum.
	10	decanatim vel ecclesiatim. This reading was suggested by Mr. Macray. Mr Haddan reads discretum et ecclesiasticum ; "discretum et" is hopelessly impossible.
	13	spectant*em*. Sic in MS. Mr. Haddan reads "spectant*ibus*".
	22	causam heresis rea*t*um periurii. c in MS. Mr. Madan suggested t. Mr. H. reads causam hereseos mendacii (?) &c.
	23	dep*riu*acionis. Mr. H. reads "dep*ut*atione*s*".
	24	ind*ag*inem. The first half only of the a has been retraced, thus altering it into a later form of e. The g has not been retraced, and is very faint. Mr. Morfill suggested "ind*a*ginem." Mr. H.
282	1	p*re*scripta. Mr. H. reads postscript: [gives jurisdictionem !
	2	anuati*m*. Mr. H. reads annates.
	2	ecclesia infradicte. Mr. H. reads ecclesiarum infradictarum.
	3	*procur*acionis. Partly erased, but several friends independently agreed with this reading. Mr. H. gives visitationis.
	3	certam summam pecunie expressam inquibusdam. Mr. H. reads et etiam summas ratione expensarum impensas ! [infra.
	5	prope finem huius libri insertis. Mr. H. reads perpetuis huius libri
	6	inductione nomine feodi x ^{s} . Mr. H. reads jurisdictionis nomine solidos x.
	6	The lacunae in lines 4–9 are caused by the piece of vellum (or paper), originally pasted over a hole in the folio, having got
	23	*s*pectat. A misprint for "ſpectat." [detached and been lost.
283	1	os*mun*di. The MS. has one limb too few for mun, and there is a contraction mark (thick over the s and) extending in a thin line over the whole word.
	7	aux|ilium. Faint and bisected by a split in the vellum. The expansion -ilium is possibly mistaken, and the word following it, dignitatis, is wr. over an erasure.
	10	deci*m*am. The contraction mark is over final "m."
	11	orroo in MS. Perhaps we should also read orr*o*o in lines 2 and 3 above. (=horreo).
	21	q*ui*. There is a contraction mark (? later) over the ui, which may be also read m, thus reading q*ua*m.
	23	Newetoñ. A misprint for Neweton.
	24	enim. There is over the ".n." the same contraction mark as over
	27	et. The et should not be underdotted. [the q*ui* in l. 21.
	29	Archidi*a*coni. The a should be underdotted.
	30	ho*c m*odo. The c is like σ, and the third limb of m is worn away.
	31	diuiss*i*. Altered later into ? diuiss*æ*.
	33	archid*iaconus*. Probably the underdots should be placed differently: arch*idiacon*us (sic).

	30	v. l*ib*. Erased, and "sol' " inserted after the l thus left.
	32	x*l*. Partially erased and altered into x*x*. And l. 33, *ii*ii. Erased.
285	1	vii. lib'. Erased, and "lxx . s' " inserted beyond the erasure.
	2	v. lib'. Erased, and the l altered into "L. sol' "
	3	[xx. denarii]. Wr. over an erasure : -enarii should be underdotted. Though one can no longer decipher the original entry there is evidence for thinking that the original sum has been reduced by more than half, probably by three-fourths.
	4	[xxxv. sol']. Wr. over an erasure, sol' is probably in the original hand and should be outside the bracket. Original entry was probably "iii lib' x sol'."—the letters lib'. x are still legible.
	5–7	Three lines here have been very successfully erased ; the first word alone in each line can be read.
	8	Lines 8-18 form lines 28-38 of col. 340, i.e. they follow in the MS. "Nomina regum Britannie," p. 285, l. 19, to p. 286, l. 16.
	8	*xi*i. Altered and erased into vi.
	9	[xxxvj] *s*ol'. et [*v*iii]. The xxxvj are wr. over an erasure ; the s is a misprint for "f" ; and the v is an altered i. Original entry was probably "iii lib'. xiii fol'. et iiii.d'."
	10	iii lib'. et x sol'. Erased, and xxxv wr. over erasure.
	11	ii*ii*. Erased. [resembles 2 joined to the b.

	13	*x*xiii. Erased.
	14	Thesauri (sic) iii l*ib'*. Erased all but the l before which an x was inserted and sol' after the l, thus reading xl sol'. Then an L was inserted before the x, the base of the L passing through the x, and thus reading either L, or Lx sol'. It is impossible to decipher the original amount, but iv or vi lib' would be more correct than iii lib' as printed in the text.
	15	Lines 15-18 are in the handwriting of the one who has cut down the payments by one half.
	17	*i*ij. A misprint for "iij." There is in the MS. a hole which in bad light looks like an i.
	18	pendeūlin . Sic in MS. =? pendeul*u*in.
	22	A. There is a hole in the MS. here and the upper half of the letter is gone. Read Augustinus, but as Mr. R. L. Poole has pointed out, the Edelbrictus of the text is confused with Æthelbert of Kent.

291		Col. 343 was found in a very dilapidated condition and consisted of a large number of loose fragments which had to be pieced together. Unfortunately many fragments are still missing, and the readings within brackets ( ) should be treated as so many suggestions.
	3	et ei*. If it were not for a loose fragment which evidently fits somewhere here one would fill the lacuna with "et ei(usdem loci capitulum)," but the loci is certainly wrong.

Appendix iv.

A TRANSLATION OF THOSE BOUNDARIES WHICH ARE DEFINED IN WELSH.

Page 42, l. 14. LLAN DÂV, with its territory and jurisdiction, to wit, Cantrè Bychan, Kidwely, Gower, Ystrad Yw, Erging, Guorinio̧d, Pen Ychen, Guynlloog, the two Guents, Ewias, and Valley Dore.

The boundaries of the episcopate:—From the estuary of the Towy upwards to its head, thence to Penndoulwyn Helig, to the source of the Usk, to Mynyo̧d Du, to the source of the Twrch, right on to the Tawè, along it upwards to Cynlès. Thence to Hal un Guernen, to the source of the Puro̧in, downwards to the Neo̧, upwards to the Melltè, eastwards to Gavannog, to Deri Emris, to Cecen Clisti, to the source of Ffrwd y Wyo̧on, right on to the Tâv Vawr, as far as the Cymer. Upwards to Rhyd y Cambren, to Hal Du, to the Cravnant brook, along it to the Usk, across the Usk to Cil Idris, to Allt Lwyd, to Lech Bichlit on Pinnmarch, to Guornoid, to Rhyd-nant, to the middle of Din Marchtan, to the Goat path, to the breast of Cader Neveni, to the spring of the Grwynè, to Guartha Bwch, to the Vincul, to the Prio̧ell, to Hal Ruva, to the Stone of the Baro̧, along the Baro̧ brook right to the Dore, along it right to the Worm, along it right to its source. Thence to Caer Rein, to the source of the Taratyr, along it to the Wye, and along the river Wye to the Severn Sea, thence to the estuary of the Towy where the jurisdiction of the episcopate of Llan Dâv began.

For a more precise definition of the boundaries see p. 134.

Page 72, l. 29. LANN CERNIU. Its boundary:—From the Nant to the spring of Nant yr Ewic. From Nant yr Ewic, the length of the brook, to the Heith-tir Rhuo̧, [to the wood] at its centre; the wood till it reaches to the Hal Melen, straight on till it descends at Llost yr Ynys. From Llost yr Ynys to the breast of the Allt.

[4] This boundary is well defined except between Aber Pyscottwr and the source of the Usk. Between the source of the Gurangon and that of Ffrwd y Wyδon is also difficult, owing to change of names. Approximately, the boundary between the head of the Usk and Hal Du is the same as the present boundary between the counties of Carmarthen and Glamorgan, and between Glamorgan and Brecknock as far as the head of the Rumney river.

[5] Jones, in his History of Breconshire, mentions this Pendoulwyn (cp. p. 42) when defining the boundaries of that county. Mr. Phillimore thinks the place is the same as Weun Ddu.

[15] Mynyδ Ferδun = Ferδun's Hill, which in English has been transformed into Money Farthing Hill, and an antiquarian has suggested that "some small coins" were found on it!

[16] The Welsh *ffor*δ is probably borrowed from English, and here we seem to have it used in the sense of ford, passage, rather than in the sense of road. At the end of this boundary rit is used as a synonym of 'ford.'

Page 208 l. 25. MATHENNI = LL. DENNY, Mon. Its boundary is: From the spring of the Diuguiniδ, Dywenyδ, along the Gwver as far as the Henbont. Along the Henbont downwards as far as the Wilca. [22] There is a Gulible in the boundary of Bishton, and if Lis Guern (p. 251) is the same as Liswery it would seem that L. Guern Timauc must be equated with Ll. Wern, Mon., which is on a Dubleis. On the other hand if Henlenic Cinauc = Ll. Gunnock, Pen Celli Guennhucc (p. 251) would seem to be Wolves Newton (cp. Villa Gunnhucc in Guartha Cum, p. 272), or some place near it, and L. Guern Timauc would be Guernesney, perhaps. Unfortunately there is a Pill near Liswery as well as near Guernesney, but Nant y Gelli I have found only near Wolves Newton.

[25] What the meaning of the 'ıuı' in the text may be is not apparent; perhaps something is omitted.

Index

The following entries are in alphabetical order with few exceptions; but note that when a consonant is doubled it is treated as a single consonant in the sequence of letters.

The spelling of the text has been followed with the exception that medial f and u have been changed into v when their sound corresponds with the sound of v. Old Welsh b and m often = v, hence it happens that medially b = f = m = u = v, as for example Ebrdil, Efrdil, Emrdil or Eurdil = Evrdil. When the text adheres to one way of spelling the same name, it is indexed under that form alone. Were Ebrdil the only form in the text it would not be found under Emrdil or Evrdil. Medial gu often = u.

The vowels a, e, i, o, u, y, are apt to interchange in a puzzling and, occasionally, in an inexplicable way. The reader should not consider that he has exhausted the references till he has looked for a name under all the vowels in turn: for example the same name may be spelt Can-, Cen-, Cin-, Con-, Cun-, Cyn-; cross references are given in all cases where the identifications have been discovered. The y has been changed into i for the most part.

In the MS. the utmost liberty is taken with the letter H, after the fashion of Glamorgan. A name beginning with any of the vowels may be indexed under H, and those that should begin with an H may be entered under one of the vowels.

D and T are apt to interchange medially and finally, and sometimes initially.
